Summer faded . . . school came inevitably . . .
musty books, the rhythmic hammering
in the new shop addition, laughter,
the hall floors polished in faint,
concentric patterns.

Autumn was
hazy, tangy afternoons; frost-tinged nights;
the receding sun casting longer shadows;
falling leaves of auburn, lemon, and amber.

The boom of a football as it is kicked, soaring high above the screaming voices of the crowd . . . the band flashing in the smoky sunlight . . .

Classes: outside the window, brilliant, inviting fall—

You, there! What is the square of 194? Who was John Cabot?

What are the home row keys? Why is—the bell!

Out, away, goodbye school! Football practice, jobs, drugstore, homework? Well . . . steam hissing in the radiators . . . Halloween . . .

Elwood 13, Kokomo 6 . . . fall is dying . . . listless, gray skies . . .

of the Year

First snow fell when the basketball team played (and won) their initial games at Plymouth and Warsaw . . .

The days grew shorter, colder . . . a welcome Thanksgiving vacation . . . trading class pictures . . . report cards. Oh. "Is there a pep session this afternoon? Wow, I haven't seen her around before! Look! My names's in the Megaphone!"

Christmas—the Crescent Dance, Santa Claus at the freshman party, seniors caroling in the halls, presents, and church on Christmas morning.

FIGHT PANTHERS FIGHT!

Tipton came close . . . the Silver Horseshoe . . .

Snow! falling like fine lace from a giant sewing basket—trees and cars in icy shells. And after school . . .

"We have just one other announcement this afternoon: The throwing of snowballs in the school area is NOT to be tolerated!"

Too many coats on the hall racks, new letter jackets, dancing in the Den at noon—Win that sectional!

It didn't happen all at once, but gradually . . .
school work became unbearable . . . the air smelled fresher, greener . . .
skies were bluer, girls prettier—it was spring!

A wisp of smoke, and the thin runners shoot out, straining in precisioned strides as they streak over the soft cinders . . .
Convertibles with tops down, tennis, carry your jacket to school, watch the trees turn green, loaf outside Sam's before the bell.
The White Sox win nine straight, Easter dresses are in bright colors, and let's go swimming at Clearwater!

A night to remember: the Prom.
After weeks of preparation, soft music, roses,
dinner jackets, and smooth-shouldered girls—
the young in love, and the cool night of stars.

Graduation a few weeks away.
“I won't cry when I leave this place, that's for sure!” “Boy! I'll be a sophomore!”

The last days were spent at gay and melancholy parties . . . then came the caps and gowns . . . practices . . . and finally—

Commencement!

It was all over, seemingly . . .

For the underclassmen, there remained two, perhaps three more happy years.

But for the seniors, the joyous high school days had ended . . . they remembered—

the ball games, the teachers, tests, homerooms, friends, and loves . . .

During four years, they played and laughed
and in more somber moments, they prayed . . . and studied . . . and wished—not that they could begin anew, for the call of maturity was beckoning—but they wished they had kept some sort of diary, some record of these few, early years.

This book is that record, created by the people who appear on its pages, and who lived its events . . .

These individuals now go their separate ways, into the wonderful, challenging world. They enjoyed the American heritage of a free education. And they not only learned—they learned to live.

JUNIOR CLASS PLAY

Adam's Evening

An unpredictable chain of events nearly led to the downfall of Adam Adams, when he began covering up for his wild adventures during "Adam's Evening," presented by the class of 1956 on April 29, 1955.

Plagued by the threats of hilarious Dr. Fragone and suicidal Elmer Green, Adam and the entire cast laid the audience on the aisles with one of the funniest high school plays in years.

As Mr. Callahan was unable to direct some of the practices and rehearsals, Mr. Kellum stepped in and carried on with a fine job of directing.

SENIOR CLASS PLAY

Stardust

The 1956 Senior Class play "Stardust," was presented to enthusiastic audiences on November 16 and 17, 1955. A comedy-satire, the play took place in the Fine Arts department of an eastern school, and the plot revolved about a famous visiting actress, Prudence Mason, who had reluctantly consented to appear in the student production of "Arthur and Cleopatra."

Matrimony, movie contracts, and making glue were part of the mayhem that ensued, and the result was a unique and entertaining production.

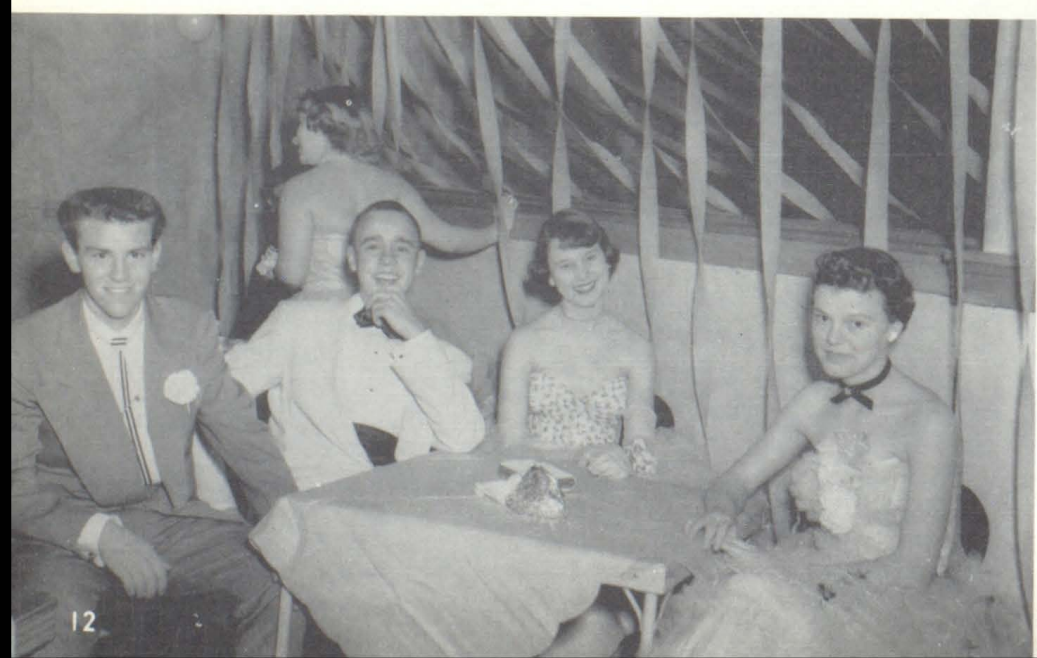

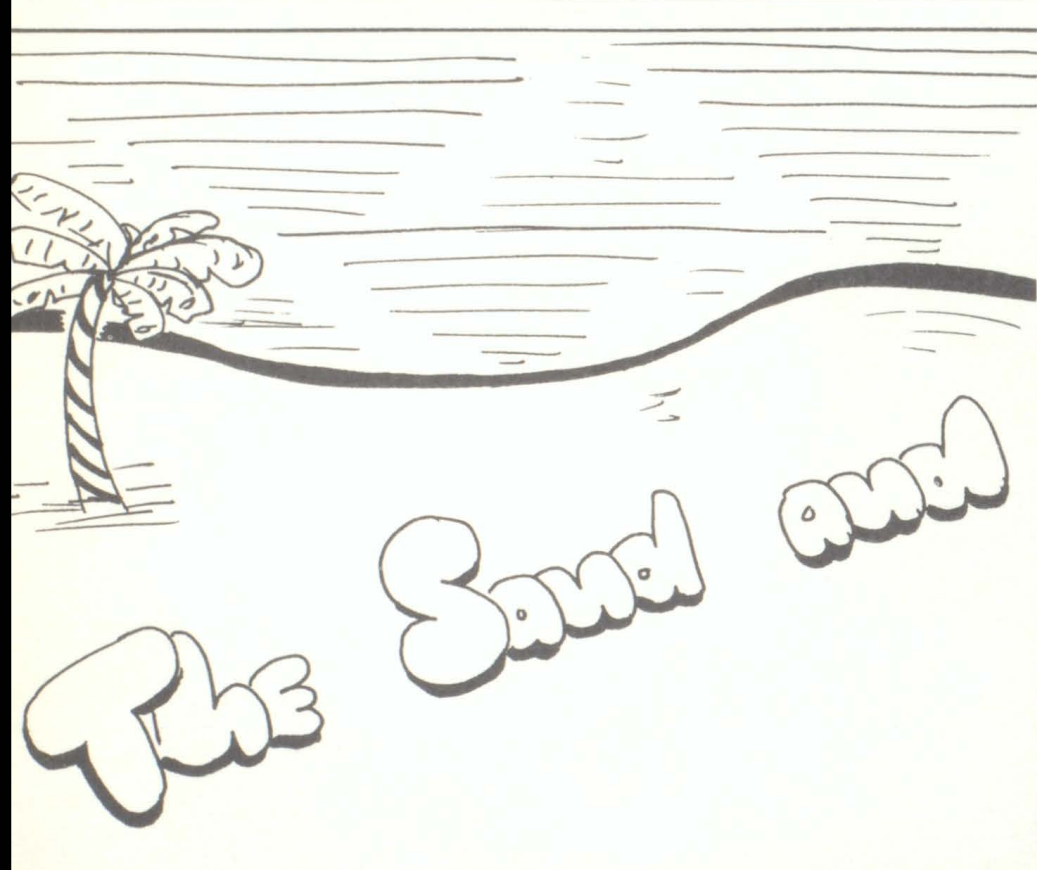

The play was directed by Mr. Brown, and Judy Holtsclaw and Dan Brunson were student directors.

Outstanding

With the leadership of such outstanding seniors as these, the Class of 1956 accomplished a great deal. When only Freshmen, the class upset a Junior tradition by winning the Homecoming Queen election. Although beaten in their Sophomore year, the class bounced back to win the same contest in their Junior year.

JEB CARTER

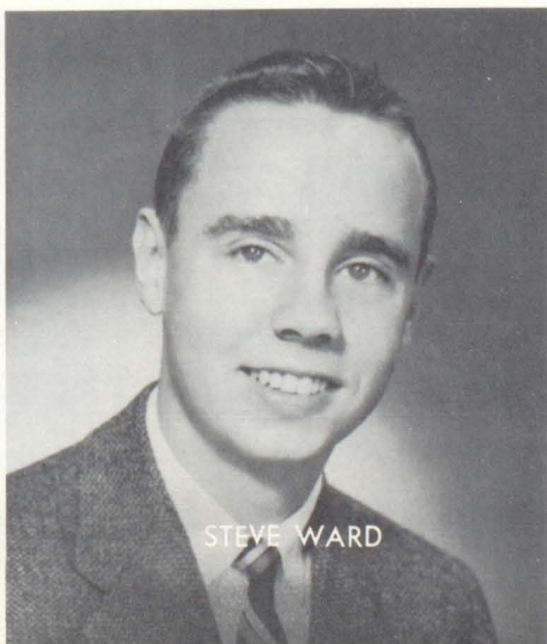

The Class of 1956 led Willkie High teams to many victories in the fields of athletics and speech, and contributed to the cultural and entertainment of everyone with other activities like the class plays, Megaphone, Crescent, and the Band.

Scholarship was another feature of the Class of 1956, and these outstanding students, along with many others, will continue to represent Elwood as a center of learning and progress.

National Honor Society

The National Honor Society is a nation-wide organization for the recognition of outstanding students. Members are chosen from the upper ten percent of the junior and senior classes by a faculty committee. The selected students must rank high in the characteristics of leadership, character, scholarship, and service.

The chosen students are probationary members during high school; but, if they continue to meet the requirements, they are initiated upon graduation and become life members. Thus they are always aware of their role as outstanding individuals and leaders. Membership in this organization is a proper recognition for worthy achievements.

Marching Band

BAND OFFICERS—Standing: Joe Noble, Steve Ward. Seated: Diana Etchison, Ann Kincaid.

Perhaps one of the most important requirements of an educational system is that musical facilities be provided. Through music, students can express themselves, boost the athletic teams, and promote a cultural side of school life.

Led by the very capable Mr. Brugger, the eighty members of the band presented many programs on the football field, during basketball games, and at special musical concerts throughout the season. The marching band performed almost faultlessly, executing precisioned maneuvers while playing during parades and half-times. The concert band exhibited its flexibility by presenting selections ranging from classical to popular, along with several solo numbers.

An auxiliary unit of flag twirlers was added to the majorette corps, which resulted in a dazzling appearance while on parade.

The voice of the individual student is echoed by his Student Council representative. These delegates, chosen by each home room, work diligently to improve the relationship between the student body and the administration. Under the sponsorship of Miss Allen, and led by president Richard Sharp, the Student Council was instrumental in solving several school problems. Through the council's efforts, the Panther Den was opened on weekday nights; the traffic problem in the halls was decreased; and a donation was given for the school organ. The council also experimented with many new educational trends, such as the Honor System, and carried out many other worthwhile accomplishments.

RICHARD SHARP, President

The Crescent

The school historians exist in the form of the Crescent staff, which works diligently throughout the school year gathering pictures, names, and records of events in order that after graduation, students may remember their wonderful high school days.

The school yearbook is a treasured object in later years, for it is the most accurate and graphic of school momentos. Much credit is due the Crescent staff for producing this all-important book.

The Megaphone

The average reader suspects little of the work that goes into publishing the school paper, the Megaphone. Specialized staffs are constantly reading copy, gathering advertisements, laying out the pages, and writing stories. With only a half hour meeting each week, the young journalists still present a paper containing news of school events, sports, announcements, and pictures of teams and outstanding students.

New columns and features were introduced this year which resulted in a refreshing paper.

The 1955-56 season was a great year for the Panthers and coach John Ward. One of the tallest teams in the state, the team faltered at the first of the season, but was really going after New Year's. The players exhibited good sportsmanship at all times and played the game fairly in winning well over half of the season's schedule.

Although Elwood will undoubtedly produce good teams in the next few years, the eight graduating seniors will be remembered as outstanding athletes.

*“Beware What You Set
Your Heart Upon,
For It Surely Shall Be Yours”*

—Ralph Waldo Emerson

These sage words by Ralph Waldo Emerson, one of America's most brilliant poets, philosophers and essayists, contain two gems of truth for today's high school graduate:

1. Any goal that you honestly set your mind and heart upon can be attained. You can accomplish anything—if you want to bad enough.
2. Choose your goals in life with care, therefore. Be sure you are right before you set out to attain them.

The Christmas season is happy, carefree . . . typical of the fun and entertainment shared by all students throughout the year. Perhaps someday we will glance through the pages of this book, to smile at the sight of the old pictures and the quaint dress. But we will remember, too . . . perhaps sadly, perhaps regretfully . . . the experiences and joyous moments that we spent in our high school days at Willkie High School.

There is no practical use for living in the past, so it is said. The experiences of the past are merely to be interpreted for use in the future. But when you are young, when you are living and existing at an age that you never again recapture, you know that you will never want to forget this wonderful life. So treasure this book always.
